

Children from throughout Miami-Dade County who will gather for the popular AIA Miami Architect in the Making (AIM) summer camp may indeed be inspired to become tomorrow’s architects. The students who register for the 14th Annual AIA Miami AIM camp will work together at the UM School of Architecture studios, where they will have classes in sustainability and green architecture, historic preservation, principles of design and even Revit computer design. They will also practice what they learned, by creating hand-drawn and computer designs and models. Field trips are planned for the campers, which may include visits to Historic Landmarks, Sandblast Competition @ Crandon Park, Key Biscayne, visits to Museums and more.
